

Acoustophoretic Waltz: a Contactless Exothermal Reaction

Daniele Foresti and Dimos Poulikakos

Department of Mechanical and Process Engineering,
ETH Zurich, Zurich, 8092, Switzerland

November 12, 2018

Abstract

The fluid dynamics video shows the acoustophoretic handling of a metal sodium chunks and a water droplets before, during and after mixing. The violent exothermal reaction between solid and liquid introduces an additional phase (hydrogen gas). We developed a unique concept for using ultrasound to stably levitated and move along a plane multiple objects in air, independently from their electromagnetic nature and aspect ratio. This contactless material handling can be extended to hazardous, chemical or radioactive samples.